David Rosenfeld is a shareholder of the law firm Weinberg, Roger & Rosenfeld. He has been practicing union-side labor law since graduating from the University of California, Berkeley School of Law in 1973. David has argued approximately 250 cases before federal and state courts of appeal, including ground-breaking cases before the United States Supreme Court, the California Supreme Court and the National Labor Relations Board. He takes pride in developing creative and unusual tactics for unions and workers and is a prolific author and presenter on such strategies. David's book Offensive Bargaining has been widely circulated, and he has presented bargaining strategies to unions across the country and beyond. Those strategies have been adopted and successfully used as effective weapons against anti-union employers by labor unions throughout the country. One of the things David likes most about being a union lawyer is that the role provides him with the opportunity to help union staff and member leaders be more offensive, aggressive and effective in dealing with employers. He taught labor law courses at the UC Berkeley School of Law for many years. These include the school's foundational labor law course, a course he designed entitled "Representing Low Wage Workers," and various seminars. David is also the recipient of awards from local labor councils and the California Labor Federation. He is licensed to practice law in California and is admitted to several federal district courts and courts of appeals, including the United States Supreme Court.
